Student Project Results in New OPAL Presentations

Online tutorials on Office of Scientific and Technical Information (OSTI) information resources and on finding free Government documents online are now available in the GPO OPAL archive. They are presented by Holly Harper, a student at the University of Washington Information School and a GPO Intern during the summer of 2009.

These tutorials will be especially helpful for general reference librarians without a documents background. To view the presentations, go to the GPO OPAL archive.

GPO thanks the University of Washington Information School for its support of this project. These tutorials, together with two earlier presentations by University of Washington student and GPO Intern Stephanie Earls, demonstrate the kind of online training that can be prepared at depository libraries and shared with the entire depository community.
